Editorial

This issue of the Journal deals with a variety of the dimensions of instructional technology as they are being realised across education. From explorations of design issues for interactive media, such as those of Rees, to questions of optimal use of available tools and pathways as discussed by Jackling, the articles in this edition highlight the issues and concerns which are facing education at all levels.

As all sectors confront the factors of economic cuts and restructuring at all organisational levels, the focus on technology based approaches is becoming even more critical. Moreover as technology runs the risk of being seen as 'THE' solution - to almost every problem, there must be a grave concern within the educational technology community that simple 'technology for technology's sake' does not become the prime intent of our educational institutions. Most of us know too well the dangers of the 'technology' perspective dominating, as opposed to the 'human' perspective.

Thus with these considerations in mind, the articles in this edition offer us some valuable considerations for our individual professional lives, and for the organisations and sectors with whom we work.

GUEST EDITOR
The Australian Journal of Educational Technology welcomes original contributions from members of the Australian Society for Educational Technology and others. Short features (up to 1000 words) and articles (up to 5000 words) should be typed, on one side of the paper only, and double spaced. Articles, submitted in triplicate, should be accompanied by an abstract of up to 100 words (for publication) and a short note on the contributor, both on separate sheets. Material can also be submitted on IBM and Macintosh format disks. Articles appearing in the Journal are professionally reviewed, and editorial policy is the responsibility of the Australian Journal of Educational Technology editorial board. Authors’ opinions should be regarded as their own unless Australian Journal of Educational Technology endorsement is noted.
